COMPASSION FOR THE ELDERLY

The elderly are wise owls that we should cherish and learn from. Their experiences in life are invaluable. We must show our appreciation by showing compassion and kindness towards them.

One way we can do this is by showing gratitude for everything they taught us. Being grateful to the elderly shows that they are valued and appreciated. We should also be compassionate by visiting them regularly. As people get older, they feel more isolated, so it is important to visit and keep them company.

Having respect for the elderly, whether through actions or words, is essential. This can be done by offering them a seat on public transport, going to the shop for them or simply using manners whilst speaking to them. Patience is also needed when around elderly people at times. This is because it may take them longer to speak, walk or sometimes they might need some guidance. Studies have proven that people recover quicker from physical or mental setbacks when they are treated with compassion and benevolence.
